Two ways to judge the scene

Identify features of positive friendships and relationships.

Use the invented scene. No real friend, relationship or private card is needed. Keep your usual aids. You can pass or ask for the agreed pause.

Choice B Scene map

Make a two-part scene map. Identify one green and one amber action, give a reason for each, then suggest a respectful next step and help route. Work in your book. A map may be a list.

Choice C Advice note

Write an advice note about the same scene. Explain one green and one amber action with reasons, then give a respectful next step and help route. Work in your book. Both choices use the same scene and checks.

Shared success checks

Identify one green and one amber action in the invented scene. Give a reason for each. Suggest a respectful next step and a trusted adult help route. Judge actions in context, not a whole person.

Main task choice

Words: green, amber, reason, step

Start: I judge this action… because…

Model: Choosing every step is amber because both need a say.

Visible model

Accepting no is a green flag because it respects choice. Choosing every step without asking is an amber flag because both people need a say. They could pause and agree a turn each, or ask school staff to help. Judge each action; one green action does not cancel the amber concern.

All boxes start blank. Check learning about the story only. This does not rate a real person, friendship or relationship.

One next step

Keep your first try, one next step and your reply in the same colour, on the same page or usual mode. Your private keep card stays with you.

Choose map B or note C. Both have the same checks. Use a work code, not a name. No real friendship, experience or private card here.

Save using the usual routine, lesson code and work code. Show the adult privately. A book, aid or exact scribe is also valid. A scribe reads back quietly so you can correct it.

Staff evidence record

Use a work code. Record fictional learning only. Keep real concerns in the separate safeguarding record. Do not inspect or copy the private keep card.
