Learning outcome: Why we remember: significance of remembrance.

Enquiry: Why does remembering matter today?

Purpose	Why it matters
People | R1	Honour full lives, identities and communities, beyond numbers.
Warning | R2	Learn how prejudice, unjust rules and choices caused harm.
Responsibility | R3	Learn accurately, check claims, treat people with dignity and seek safe help.

Forms can serve several purposes

Memorials, shared days and education can support more than one purpose. Give a reason for your link. Practices vary within and between communities; no single ritual is required.

Holocaust Memorial Day is marked in the UK on 27 January each year. It remembers those murdered in the Holocaust, other victims of Nazi persecution and people murdered in later genocides. It offers time to learn and reflect on prejudice and hatred today. Our lesson is on 26 January, the day before.

Keep a clear limit

Remembrance alone cannot guarantee safety or end hatred. Learning, laws, institutions and choices matter. A ceremony is not proof that someone understands the history.

Where this leads: historians and museum educators explain significance with accurate context and care. You may pass or ask for the supervised pause.
