In Story A, the friends are afraid and turn to their teacher. The text links the event with faith.

Some Christians read this as an idea about trust through fear. I use a detail from the story.

I do not claim that faith controls real weather or that a frightened person has failed.

In your book: Keep one useful model note or word meaning. Mark it as model, not your own evidence.

Source and check

A sacred text is studied as a source of meaning within a faith.

Story A can be read through trust; Story B through persistence in its prayer context.

We can describe these ideas without acting out prayer or claiming that belief guarantees safety or justice.

Use the supplied third-person sources. No personal belief or loss story is needed. You may use the neutral case to explain a source idea, or pass.

Two parallel empty rows are labelled story detail, possible meaning and limit. The stories are not acted out or illustrated with sacred figures.

We Do

Find what the woman does in Story B and why the judge acts.

Record one idea about persistence, plus a limit to how we use this story.

In your book: One guided record and your own source detail, choice or starting step.

Story A — G-P-S1; adapted Christian sacred-text account

In the story, a teacher and his friends are in a boat. A storm frightens the friends. They wake the teacher. He speaks to the wind and water, and they become calm. He asks about their faith. Some Christians read this as a story about trust. This is the text's account, not proof that faith stops real storms.

Story B — G-P-S2; adapted Christian sacred-text story

A woman asks an unjust judge for justice. She keeps returning. At last, the judge acts so her requests will stop. The text uses the story to teach not giving up in prayer. We study that idea without praying. The unfair judge is not a model of good care. Persistence does not always secure justice.

R1: The Christian account linked the central teacher's rising from death with hope. We reported it as that source's belief.

R2: The account called for kindness and care towards people in need. Hope can go with practical action.

R3: The room case had no promised solution. A faith account can offer hope without showing that all suffering has ended.

60-second recap: The Christian account linked belief in new life with hope. It also called for care. We kept hope distinct from a known outcome.
