Staff answers and teaching notes

Exact outcome

Recognise emotions and healthy ways to manage stress.

Starter and core ideas

Quote 1 worried; quote 2 frustrated. Match or identify the same words. Emotions are not moral grades. Stress describes a response to pressure, not a diagnosis from a single behaviour. A person may have more than one feeling. Use stated clues and cautious language for an inferred feeling.

Model A

Worried is stated. The pressure is organising three tasks. One manageable first step can clarify a start. Talking privately with a trusted adult can help agree priorities or adjust the demand. A request for help counts as a healthy strategy, not evidence of failure.

Guided choice answers

Both guided choices should produce two useful actions with reasons. Replace “Just do all three at once” with small steps plus adult support, or another justified pair from Card 4. The pressure may need adjusting as well as the person taking a pause.

Hinge and parallel hinge

Main B: help is available while the person still feels stressed. Parallel A: a strategy may help but more support may be needed. If incorrect or unsupported, use A’s private request and recheck privately. Keep model, word bank, frame and normal aids. No public hands-up vote.

Safe teaching scope

No request for personal stress scores, symptoms, past events or family details. Do not simulate a stressful event or require breathing, eyes closed, exercise or disclosure. No clinical assessment or treatment. Generic help only. Staff confirm the actual private route before teaching.

Two choices with the same learning

Choice 1 B Case map

Emotion: frustrated, supported by the stated quote and missed steps. Strategy 1: ask for one instruction at a time; this reduces what must be held in mind. Strategy 2: an agreed short pause with a return plan; this gives time to settle and ask for the next step. A written step list or another justified healthy pair is acceptable. Add a trusted adult/private route.

Choice 2 C Advice note

“You feel worried about speaking. Your first sentence is hard to choose. Write and rehearse one line in private so you have a clear start. Ask a trusted adult to agree support, such as a typed response, so you can take part in a suitable way. You can ask for a private talk.” Accept equivalent wording and other fitting healthy options.

Equal demand

Both products identify an emotion with a clue and two different healthy strategies with reasons. Each gives a private route. Book and typed work use the same checks. Scribing or an aid can capture the same thinking. Do not require a longer note or a polished diagram. A strategy’s fit matters more than its label.

Review and exit

Weak model: “They feel bad. Take a break.” Improve by naming worried/frustrated from a case, adding the quote, or explaining an agreed pause and return plan. Exit strategy example: “One small step may make the task clear.” Myth correction: “The person can ask for help while still feeling stressed.”

Aspire

Explain a useful first step, another option and a limit. For B, a clearer instruction may address the pressure more directly than a pause alone. For C, private rehearsal may help but support or a different response mode may still be needed. Avoid ranking one route or learner as better.

Evidence access and private support

Judgements

Record emotion recognition and strategy recognition separately. Secure emotion recognition uses a plausible label and clue. Secure strategy recognition identifies two healthy options and links them to the pressure. Private-route knowledge is an additional recorded check. Partial evidence is retained honestly. No response, including a pass, is unobserved. Do not infer wellbeing from compliance or a completed task.

Typed route

The editable Evidence Sheet includes a blank optional Type instead page. Learners may use the cells for a case map or write an advice note in its large prompt cell. Save with the usual routine and lesson code. Offer typing for either choice; a device problem should lead to book, aid or scribe access without penalty.

Feedback and scribe

Read neutrally; record the learner’s exact words or selections; check back privately. Record usual access apart from answer cues. Give one NS, retain first response and reply. R follows Voice, Audience, NS and response; E means actual work saved. Offer to the Communication portfolio. Any accredited mapping needs staff confirmation.

Private route and staff response

Trusted adult and the school’s help route. A learner may point to HELP, type or write a private request, or use an aid. If one adult is busy or support is insufficient, use the route to another trusted adult. No need to exhaust self-help first. Listen calmly, avoid probing, do not promise secrecy and follow usual procedures. Keep concerns out of public evidence.
