Wellbeing learning guide

Wellbeing, resilience & mental health.

Use the invented learner for class work. Personal reflection stays private. You may use words, drawing, pointing or your usual aid. A scribe can record your exact chosen words and read them back.

The invented learner

A learner starts a new weekly routine. They are unsure what to do first and want some time to unwind. They enjoy making things. A trusted member of school staff can explain the new routine. The learner chooses one short quiet activity during an agreed break and plans to ask the staff member for a check-in.

In your book

Explain wellbeing, mental health and resilience in plain words. Link one practical idea in the story to a wheel area. Suggest one realistic change for the invented learner, with support or an alternative if a barrier appears. You can use the glossary, model and chosen tier pack.

A model

The learner uses people by planning a safe check-in, and downtime by choosing a quiet activity. An interest could also give purpose. Asking for help and adjusting the plan can show resilience.

One step only

The learner could try one short quiet making activity at the next agreed break. Staff help with materials supports that step. If materials are missing, another quiet activity is a fallback, not a second goal.

Learning check and response

Use the learning self-check in your chosen pack if you wish. It checks what you can explain, not your mood or health. Keep your first fictional try, use one next step and respond in the same colour, on the same page or usual mode. No personal wheel or plan needs to be shown.

Use a work/session code, not a name. Record fictional explanations and usual support. Do not collect personal wheel marks, plans, health/sleep/family history or disclosure details. Keep concerns in the separate school safeguarding record.

Record actual evidence, prompted work or learning not observed. Blank/pass is not failure. Do not infer health, a diagnosis or improvement from performance. A private wheel/plan is not evidence to collect. Support a pupil with no identified trusted adult privately; do not press.

Any disclosure goes to safeguarding lead through school procedure. Listen, reassure; do not probe or promise secrecy. Maintain the pre-agreed supervised step-out route. E actual work saved; R only after Voice, Audience, one NS and own response. Offer to the Communication portfolio.
