Invented model and key ideas

All stories are made up. Use the characters only. No personal stories, family details, accounts, appearance ratings or real incidents are needed. Pair talk is optional. No acted conflict or pupil casualty practice.

Two safe choices

Two invented friends plan a display. One wants to draw. The other wants to write. Each can say no without fear. They pause, take turns to listen and agree to do one part each. Either can ask for more time or adult help.

Worked reason

This is a safe disagreement. Each person has a voice and a real choice. Taking turns may help. An agreement works only if both choose it freely. If fear, pressure or control appears, stop the joint problem-solving task and get adult help.

Ideas to keep in view

• A safe disagreement leaves each person free to say no, pause or seek help.

• Calm listening may help when both people feel safe. A shared plan must be freely chosen.

• Pressure, control or fear needs adult help. The person under pressure is not to blame.

• Tell a trusted adult or the safeguarding lead. Try another trusted adult if needed. Get staff help at once if danger is happening now.

Use words, pointing, drawing, typing or the usual communication aid. An adult may scribe the learner's exact words and read them back. Plan in any language. Record access aids separately from prompts that supplied content.

Invented cases for the pair

A change of plan

Two invented friends plan a quiet game. One now wants to read. The other is disappointed but accepts a pause. Both can say no. Neither feels afraid.

• Which detail shows that each person still has a choice?

• What calm step could help with this disagreement?

• Why does neither person have to agree to a plan they do not want?

Rules for a friend

In a made-up story, one friend keeps demanding to know where the other is. They say the other must stop talking to a different friend. The other person feels worried about saying no.

• Which details suggest pressure or control?

• Should the worried person bargain about how much control is allowed?

• What safer next step and adult help route could they choose?

Reader A spots a clue. Checker B explains a reason. Swap for the next case. Use books or usual aids for each learner's own answer. Working alone is valid.

Safe choices and private check

The first adult is busy

An invented learner says a relationship leaves them afraid to say no. The first trusted adult is busy and cannot listen then. Another trusted member of staff and the safeguarding lead are available. The learner does not need to tell the whole class.

• Does the first adult being busy mean the learner must manage alone?

• Who else could the learner tell, by role?

• What could a private request for help say?

Private hinge

In an invented story, one person keeps setting rules about who a friend may speak to. The friend feels afraid to say no. Which next step is safer?

A. Agree to half the rules so both people give something up.

B. Tell a trusted adult or the safeguarding lead and get help to stay safe.

C. Confront the person alone and demand an apology.

Give one reason privately. An adult can read the choices. Use words, pointing or the usual aid.

A safe help route

A character can tell a trusted adult or the safeguarding lead privately. If the first adult is away or does not help, try another trusted adult. If there is danger now, get urgent help. No one needs to prove a worry before asking for help.

Visible model

This is a safe disagreement. Each person has a voice and a real choice. Taking turns may help. An agreement works only if both choose it freely. If fear, pressure or control appears, stop the joint problem-solving task and get adult help.

Pause card

I would like to use my agreed pause.

Use the agreed pause signal. No public reason is needed. An adult supports the agreed supervised route, a neutral task and a supported return. A learner may pass, observe or catch up privately. Keep supervision in place.

Private help opener

A character could say: Can I talk privately? I need help with a safety worry.

A character can tell a trusted adult or the safeguarding lead privately. If the first adult is away or does not help, try another trusted adult. If there is danger now, get urgent help. No one needs to prove a worry before asking for help.

Learning review

In your book, choose Ready to explain, With a prompt or Need another example for each learning point. All choices start blank. This is a learning check, not a judgement about health, family life or safety. Pass is valid.

Keep the first try. Use one next step and respond in the usual mode. No personal detail is needed.
