Staff answers & diagnostic guide — Curate the studio showcase

Pathway: BASE · Week 7 Part 2 · Big question: How do we arrange and label our relief panels for a class art show?

Starter answer & explanation

Question: Why do galleries leave a clean space between each artwork on the wall?

Correct: So your eyes can look at one artwork at a time without the frames crowding each other — Yes. A finger-width or hand-width gap gives each piece breathing room.

Guided team check (We do) answers

Q1: When we walk round our class art show, how do we look at the relief panels? -> Look closely with our eyes and keep hands behind our backs so raised foil stays safe (Yes. Art wall eyes keep every delicate foil bump safe.)

Q2: What makes a great praise note for a friend's art show label? -> Naming one clear thing that looks strong, like 'Bold chrome dry-brushing on the ridges' (Yes. Naming the exact part shows you looked with care.)

Q3: How can we grouping the panels so the whole wall looks balanced? -> Put tall tower panels fast or alternate arches and towers in a neat mark set (Yes. Grouping by shape or swapping heights makes the wall look planned.)

Question: What does it mean to 'set out' an art art show?

Correct: To arrange and label artworks neatly with even spaces so people can enjoy them — Yes. Setting out turns individual panels into a proud art show.
