Big question: How do we deliver a clear tabletop studio demonstration and curate our architectural panels as a cohesive exhibition?

• Deliver your 90-second studio skill demonstration to a small group using your Week 6 exemplar board.

• Collaborate as a curatorial team to hang and label the finished architectural relief panels with unified sightlines.

• Complete a final studio evaluation recording peer feedback on both your skill share and your exhibited panel.

Essential vocabulary

• skill share: A short practical demonstration where you teach a studio method to peers.

• sightline: The horizontal eye-level line that connects a row of hung artworks cleanly.

• museum label: A formal card beside an exhibited piece listing Title, Medium, Scale, and Maker's Note.

• cohesive: Looking unified and thoughtfully grouped as one whole exhibition.

• evaluation: Reviewing what worked well in your demonstration and final artwork.

Three-step studio method

Step 1: Deliver the 90-second tabletop demo: I welcome two classmates to my station, point to Tiles 1, 2, and 3 on my demo board, and share my top pressure tip.

Step 2: Hang and label my panel on the sightline: I use a 10 cm spacer block to align my relief panel with the row and mount my museum label neatly below the right corner.

Step 3: Leave peer feedback and complete my evaluation: I write two specific praise notes for classmates and complete my own end-of-unit evaluation sheet.
