Staff answers & diagnostic guide — Delivering the workshop and curating the exhibition

Pathway: SUMMIT · Week 7 Part 2 · Big question: How do we facilitate our live peer studio workshop and curate the collective structural installation?

Starter answer & explanation

Question: When curating our major relief panels alongside the smaller tiles made in today's workshops, how can we arrange them so the display looks architectural and unified?

Correct: Align the major relief panels along the primary eye-level horizon line and group the matching workshop tiles in a neat grid strip directly below or beside each leader's panel — Exactly! Pairing each major relief panel with the workshop tiles it inspired shows both mastery and leadership.

Guided team check (We do) answers

Q1: During your live workshop delivery, how do you support a participant whose foil or card edge lifts slightly? -> Calmly model the troubleshooting fix on your Stage 2 exemplar tile and hand them the spreader or blunt tool so they resolve it themselves (Correct! Coaching with your exemplar empowers the participant while keeping ownership in their hands.)

Q2: Why do we angle the exhibition lamps at a shallow 25-degree grazing angle across the finished gallery wall? -> To activate the 3-plane relief depth, throwing the laminated girders and embossed rivets into high-contrast shadow across the whole installation (Spot on. Unified raking illumination binds all the individual panels into one dramatic architectural wall.)

Q3: What three pieces of evidence complete your Studio suite portfolio at the end of today's session? -> Your exhibited structural relief panel (+ museum label), your upgraded Workshop leadership Board (+ participant feedback slips), and your Summative evaluation (Yes! Together they prove brief-led design, material mastery, curatorial skill, and peer leadership.)

Question: Why does exhibiting the small tiles made by your workshop participants alongside your main relief panel strengthen the final showcase?

Correct: It demonstrates both your personal material mastery on the main panel and your ability to lead and pass on studio skills to others — Correct! Pairing the master panel with participant outcomes celebrates both craft and leadership.
