Evidence cards A and B

A · the Sikh volunteer

Fictional profile: the Sikh volunteer is Sikh. At the gurdwara she helps serve langar, a free meal for anyone. She says serving others makes her feel part of something.

This is one person's view. Others who share the worldview may describe it differently.

B · the Muslim participant

Fictional profile: the Muslim participant is Muslim. At communal prayers he stands shoulder to shoulder with others. During Ramadan the community breaks the fast together.

This is one person's view. Others who share the worldview may describe it differently.

Evidence cards C and D

C · Four lenses

People: who is there? Place: where do they meet? Practice: what do they do? Values: what matters to them?

Four lenses are a starting point, not the whole picture.

D · Belonging varies

Some people feel they belong strongly to a faith community. Others belong in quieter ways, or to several communities.

Belonging is personal and can change.

Shared investigation

Sort each detail: Simran’s community, Yusuf’s community or both. Use the four lenses: people, place, practice, values. Take a turn to suggest a match, then check the evidence.

1. How can serving langar help a person belong?
2. Which clue supports your answer?
3. Do people in the same community always feel the same way?
