Viewpoints about change and support

Pink supported edition

One big question

Does change make us stronger?

Stronger here can mean gaining a skill, confidence or a helpful way to cope. This can include asking for support.

An invented example

This example is about no real person.

A group changes the order of two familiar tasks. One person likes the new order. Another finds it hard to follow. A clear plan and time to practise may help. The group can explain what works and ask for changes.

Think about it

Could the same change affect people differently?
What support might help?

Viewpoints about change and support continued

Pink supported edition

Christianity

A religious worldview.

A possible viewpoint

Some Christians may find hope in God’s care during change. Prayer, thinking and help from others may support them. Change can help, hurt or do both. Faith does not promise that every change makes a person stronger. A person may need time, rest or a safer situation.

Use the idea

How might this view answer our big question?
What reason could support that answer?

An original possible viewpoint, not a quotation from a real person. People within each worldview may think differently.

Viewpoints about change and support continued

Pink supported edition

Humanism

A non-religious worldview.

A possible viewpoint

Some humanists may use experience, reason and kindness to respond to change. They do not rely on gods. Help from others may support them. Change can help, hurt or do both. A person may need time, rest or a safer situation.

Use the idea

How might this view answer our big question?
What reason could support that answer?

An original possible viewpoint, not a quotation from a real person. People within each worldview may think differently.