Key Word	Definition
Watch me do it:	Watch me do it: I take the card about the burial. The clues say the grave held a jet bracelet and an ivory bangle, and tests on the bones point to the north of Africa. No date is written. Roman objects like these are dated by experts to the 300s. So I commit: long ago, Roman. I write it on my board. Then I lift the flap. York in Roman times, 4th century. My commit was right, and I know which clue worked: the objects. claim	The diagram above has three boxes: claim, then evidence, then how sure. The claim is what we say about the past. The evidence is the card. The last box is a judgement: very sure, fairly sure, or not yet.
evidence	The diagram above has three boxes: claim, then evidence, then how sure. The claim is what we say about the past. The evidence is the card. The last box is a judgement: very sure, fairly sure, or not yet.
how sure	The diagram above has three boxes: claim, then evidence, then how sure. The claim is what we say about the past. The evidence is the card. The last box is a judgement: very sure, fairly sure, or not yet.
Fixing it together:	Fixing it together: shrink the claim to fit the evidence. "The burial in York shows that at least one woman with heritage from the north of Africa lived and died in Britain in Roman times, and other finds suggest she was not alone." Now the claim is the size of the evidence.

Key Facts

- Last week we explained why people came to Britain after 1948. This week we look much further back.
- Archaeology means finding and studying things people left behind. A burial can tell us where someone grew up.

Arrival Task

What we already know about evidence

1) Last week we explained why people came to Britain after 1948. This week we look much further back.

2) Archaeology means finding and studying things people left behind. A burial can tell us where someone grew up.

Why commit before you look?

Here are two ways to use the same card. Way A: lift the flap, read the period, say “I knew that”. Way B: read the clues, commit to a period on your whiteboard, then lift the flap and compare.

Try it in your head: someone hands you a coin with a king's head on it. Before you turn it over, commit: old or new? Now turn it over and read the date. Was your clue good enough? That is commit and reveal.

We Do 1: Commit before the reveal

Card 1: a painted roll showing a court procession, with a Black trumpeter on horseback. No year printed on the card.

Card 2: a list of ship passengers with names, ages and the jobs they hoped to do. A ship name is printed.

Card 3: a table counting people by where they were born, made by the government.

We Do 2: Everyone commits to how sure

We judge one card on the board first. Nobody writes yet. Everyone writes very, fairly or not yet on a whiteboard for the same card. Then we show them all at once. Then we agree a reason. The card for this is the 1948 passenger list. The claim is done: hundreds of people from the Caribbean arrived on one ship in June 1948. Your job is the how-sure box. Write the word and one clue from the card, not a describing word.

Your route

Three cards. Commit to a period for each on your board, then lift the flap and tick or change. An adult may scribe your exact words, and the words stay yours. Point to the clue first, then the period.

The model

Watch me do it: I take the card about the burial. The clues say the grave held a jet bracelet and an ivory bangle, and tests on the bones point to the north of Africa. No date is written. Roman objects like these are dated by experts to the 300s. So I commit: long ago, Roman. I write it on my board. Then I lift the flap. York in Roman times, 4th century. My commit was right, and I know which clue worked: the objects.

Fixing it together: shrink the claim to fit the evidence. "The burial in York shows that at least one woman with heritage from the north of Africa lived and died in Britain in Roman times, and other finds suggest she was not alone." Now the claim is the size of the evidence.

Check yourself

- Check yourself: did you commit before lifting each flap?
- Check yourself: does every row name the clue you used?
- Check yourself: is every claim the size of its evidence, not bigger?

From the lesson sheet

Diverse British History

SoW: 'GROW Weekly - Autumn'!C49 — "Investigate diverse British history (Black History Month)."

Learning objective: I can commit to a period for a piece of evidence before it is revealed, and say how sure the evidence lets us be.

No personal heritage, family or identity is required. Every task can be completed with the supplied evidence cards and their flaps.

The commit and reveal row

Commit → reveal → clue → how sure. The commit comes before the flap.

The first row is done for you, from the card we judged together. It is in italics so you know it is not yours. Fill in as many of the rows below it as you can.

Choose a route

1. I chose my own route.
2. My judgements are in my own words.
3. Any adult help is written on the record.

5 · Learner confirmation

I confirm this is my own work.

Exit Ticket – Supported

1) Read one row to a partner or to an adult. The listener says back how sure they heard you were, in their own words.

2) Did the listener hear very where you meant fairly? Then change that one word. That change is your influence. It belongs to you, not to them.

3) Next week you will judge how significant one person or event was, using evidence like this. Keep your record. It will help you then.
