Beliefs in hard times source cards

White standard edition

Christianity

Many Christians believe God cares about people. During change or hardship, some pray to God, asking for comfort or strength. A church community may offer a listening ear or practical help. In a story Jesus told, a helper stopped to care for a hurt stranger. Some Christians use this story as a reason to support others. Prayer, the story and shared care may help a person feel less alone. Christians do not all cope in the same way.

Story source: a simple original summary of Jesus’ story in the Gospel of Luke. No scripture wording is reproduced.

Think and talk

How might prayer or shared care help someone feel less alone?

These are examples. People within a worldview may respond differently.

Beliefs in hard times source cards continued

White standard edition

Islam

Many Muslims believe Allah cares for people. Some make dua, asking Allah for help, or find strength in regular prayer. A mosque community may offer company or practical support. The Qur’an tells of Ayyub, who faced hardship and asked Allah for help. Many Muslims see him as an example of patience. His story may help someone keep going and seek support. This does not mean hiding pain or waiting without help. Muslims do not all cope in the same way.

Dua means personal prayer. Allah is the Arabic word for God. The story summary uses original wording.

Think and talk

How might prayer, patience or shared support help someone keep going?

These are examples. People within a worldview may respond differently.

Beliefs in hard times source cards continued

White standard edition

Humanism

Humanism is a non-religious worldview. Humanists use reason and kindness to guide choices. Some reflect on what they can change, talk with others and plan one useful step. A community may offer a listening ear or practical help. Invented example, not a real account: a person faces a changed routine; friends listen and help them make a new plan. Such stories can encourage shared problem solving. Humanists do not all cope in the same way.

Think and talk

How might talking and making a plan help someone face a change?

These are examples. People within a worldview may respond differently.