Pupil studio resources & worksheet — Present and sequence the studio portfolio

Pathway: TRACK · Week 7 Part 1 · Big question: How do we select, sequence, and annotate our studio studies to tell a clear story of artistic growth?

Arrival check

When someone opens an artist's portfolio, why is seeing the early test grids and rough thumbnails next to the final piece so impressive?

[ ] It proves how the artist tested ideas, solved problems, and built up to the final artwork

[ ] You can trace the exact link from Week 1 media tests through Week 3 planning to the resolved piece

[ ] Even a test that went wrong and got fixed in Week 2/5 shows real resilience and skill

Starter visual cues

Page 1 (Foundation): Week 1 four-media taster grid + Week 2 three-trial skill progression.

Page 2 (Design): Week 3 thumbnail sketches, colour swatches, and four-choice composition blueprint.

Page 3 (Context): Week 6 artist transcription and personal motif response.

Page 4 (Resolution & Reflection): Week 4/5 refined identity piece + Week 7 reflective summary sheet.

Vote: What turns a loose pile of drawings into a coherent, professional studio portfolio?

Studio practice planner

Assemble your portfolio sequence and final synthesis statement.

Shapes/Focus: Stage 1: Media & skill trials, Stage 2: Composition blueprint, Stage 3: Maker study & response, Stage 4: Resolved identity piece

Tools/Methods: Strength: Tonal gradation, Strength: Pattern resist wash, Strength: Figure-ground contrast, Strength: Mixed-media layering

Exit ticket

Why do we sequence our early media tests and plans right before our finished identity artwork in the portfolio?

[ ] To show the complete visual journey and prove how deliberate testing and planning built the final piece

[ ] To hide the final artwork at the back

[ ] Because pages only fit one way
