Profile A A small bakery

Practice profiles prepared 30 October 2026. These are invented examples. They describe no real employer, vacancy or offer.

Roles

A baker makes bread. A shop assistant serves people and checks orders. A team leader plans the work.

Skills the employer values

Staff value care, clear talk and team work. A shop assistant checks an order and asks if a detail is unclear. This helps the team give the right items.

How recruitment works

First, read the role details and send an application with a skill example. Staff select people to meet. Next comes an interview and a short order-check task. Staff compare the evidence before deciding whom to offer a role. Applying alone does not mean a job offer.

Support and belonging

New staff get written task steps and a buddy to ask for help. This can help a person learn a new routine and check a step they do not yet know.

Staff explain new words and invite questions. A private check-in gives space to ask for help. Belonging includes being heard and treated with respect.

Progression and gaps

With training and evidence of skills, a worker could apply for more tasks or a team leader role. A later role has its own checks and is not promised.

Pay, hours, entry grades, age rules, travel, dates and real jobs are not given. Ask about these before a real choice.

Read and discuss only. No real work task, equipment or site visit is part of this card.

Profile B A warehouse

Practice profiles prepared 30 October 2026. These are invented examples. They describe no real employer, vacancy or offer.

Roles

A stock worker checks goods and records where they go. A dispatch worker checks orders. A team leader plans the shift.

Skills the employer values

Staff value accuracy, safe choices and clear messages. A stock worker checks an item code against the order and asks about a mismatch. Guessing could send the wrong item.

How recruitment works

First, read the role details and send an application with a skill example. Staff select people to meet. Next comes an interview and a short paper stock-check task. Staff compare the evidence before deciding whom to offer a role. Applying alone does not mean a job offer.

Support and belonging

New staff see a task model, practise with a buddy and use a clear checklist. This can help a person learn the steps and spot a missed check.

Staff can raise a concern and ask for a step to be shown again. A private check-in helps them discuss support. The example values questions as part of safe work.

Progression and gaps

With training and evidence of skills, a worker could apply for stock control or a team leader role. Further training and selection may be needed.

Pay, hours, entry grades, age rules, travel, dates and real jobs are not given. Support in a real job needs to be discussed.

Read and discuss only. No real work task, equipment or site visit is part of this card.

Questions for the encounter

Choose a question with a clear purpose. You may write it or ask an adult to relay your own words.

Topic	Question idea
Roles	What do people do in this workplace?
Skills	Which skill matters, and how do staff show it?
Recruitment	What happens after I apply? What evidence do you use?
Progression	How could a worker learn more or move to another role?
Culture and support	How do new staff get help and feel part of the team?

Before

“I want to find out ... . My question is ... . This matters because ... .” Rehearse in private if it helps.

During

Keep a skill clue, recruitment steps and one support. Ask a follow-up if a reply is unclear. Mark a missing fact as a gap.

After

Explain what the employer values, how staff are chosen and how one support can help. Compare a clue with your earlier personal profile. Keep one next question.

Visitor reply, recorded fact and adult practice reply are different sources. Mark what actually happened. Plan in any language.

A model and short choices

Practice model from A

The bakery values care. A shop assistant checks an order, which can help avoid wrong items. Staff read applications, select people to meet, then use an interview and task before an offer decision. Written steps can help a new worker learn a routine.

Practice profile link: “My earlier profile said I like clear steps. The written steps could help me. I would ask how I can get help if a step is unclear.” This is a model, not your past view.

Floor choices

Use profile A. An adult may read or scribe your own choices.

Check	Choices
Skill clue	A: Checks an order with care. B: Is just good at everything.
Recruitment	A: Apply, then selection and checks. B: Apply and the job is yours.
Support	A: No help is needed. B: Written steps can help with a new routine.
Belonging	A: Staff can ask and be heard. B: Nobody can ask a question.
Real encounter	A: The role-play proves a real visit. B: Mark the profile exchange as practice.
Portfolio gap	A: Keep a gap and plan an action. B: Tick work that is missing.

Choices alone are not the full task. Explain the skill clue, recruitment steps and how support helps. Link to your own earlier profile if it is available. Keep missing work honest.

Adult response bank for practice

Tell learners this is role-play. Answer from A or B, allow a follow-up and keep missing facts as gaps.

Topic	Profile A reply	Profile B reply
Roles	Baker, shop assistant, team leader.	Stock worker, dispatch worker, team leader.
Skills and clue	Care, clear talk, team work. Check an order and ask about unclear details.	Accuracy, safe choices, clear messages. Check a code and ask about a mismatch.
Recruitment	Application with skill example; selection; interview and order-check task; offer decision.	Application with skill example; selection; interview and paper stock-check task; offer decision.
Support and effect	Written steps and buddy can help with a new routine and an unknown step.	Task model, buddy and checklist can help learn steps and spot missed checks.
Culture	Questions, clear words, private check-in and respect.	Raise a concern, ask for a repeat, private support check-in.
Progression	Training and evidence may support an application for more tasks or team leader.	Training and evidence may support stock control or team leader applications.

For pay, hours, grades, age, travel, dates or actual vacancies: “This practice card does not tell us. Keep that question for a real employer.”

Never turn a practice reply into a real employer reply. No job or later promotion is promised.

Adult key and evidence check

Keep this page apart from first responses. Record the learner’s own answers before sharing the key.

Check	Answer and reason
Skill clue	A: Checking an order shows care.
Recruitment	A: An application is followed by selection and checks.
Support	B: Written steps can help a person learn a new routine.
Belonging	A: Asking and being heard can help people take part.
Real encounter	B: Role-play remains practice.
Portfolio gap	A: A missing output needs an honest gap and action.

Floor key A, A, B, A, B, A. Ask for an explanation of all three outcome parts. Keep source clues and actual help used.

A file can be present but incomplete. A missing earlier profile cannot show a past view. Date any new baseline and keep the comparison due. A profile simulation can show skills but cannot prove a real employer visit.

Use the seven-week index. Keep a reference, status and next action. Choose one clear next step, with a person to help and a review date.
