Source check

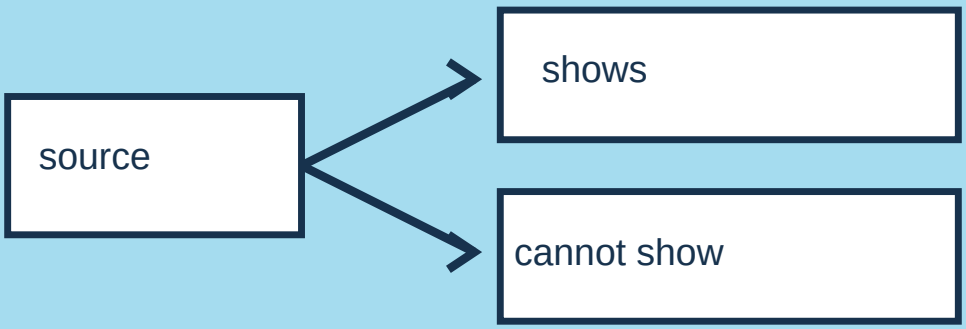

Use the named source to complete the empty spaces. Keep the claim within what the source can show.

H1 · Christian hope account

This Christian account links hope with belief in the resurrection of the central teacher of Christianity, and with forgiveness, kindness and care. Some believers draw meaning and encouragement from this belief and their community. This is a Christian belief claim, not a classroom proof or a promise that hardship will disappear.

H2 · Christian parable account

In a Christian parable, a person persistently asks an unjust judge for justice. The judge eventually responds because of the persistence. The text connects the story with perseverance in prayer. Some believers interpret it as encouragement to persist in seeking justice. The class studies the story; nobody prays or imitates its roles. Real efforts do not always succeed, and lack of success does not mean weak belief.

H3 · Humanist account

This humanist account locates meaning in this life and values reason, evidence and concern for people and the world. Some humanists may find hope in practical cooperation and achievable change. This is a possible application of the account, not a claim that humanists cannot feel despair or need help.

H4 · Authored community case; not testimony

A storm damages the labels and small beds in a community garden project. Nobody is hurt. The organiser closes the damaged area until it is checked. Some volunteers want to restart immediately; others want a smaller plan after repairs. There are spare materials for one bed, and a trained adult can check it tomorrow. No outcome has yet occurred.

H5 · Response options

A: insist everyone returns at once because hope guarantees success. B: agree a pause, request the safety check and plan one achievable repaired bed. C: say the whole project can never be useful again. Evaluate the reasons and evidence. A person may step back or change the goal without being blamed for lacking resilience.
