A–F are the factual revision bank from Week 5. No historical text or picture is copied.

A A setting and reasons for change

Before December 1955; requests in 1954

Montgomery bus rules treated Black riders unfairly. These rules had lasted for years. In 1954, the Women's Political Council asked for fairer bus treatment. Little changed. These grievances gave people reasons to protest.

B An arrest helped set off action

1 December 1955

Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on a Montgomery bus. Police arrested her. Organisers then called for people to stay off buses on 5 December. The arrest was a trigger, not the only cause.

C Many people sustained the boycott

From 5 December 1955, during 1955–1956

The boycott began on 5 December 1955. Many Black residents avoided the buses. They walked or shared rides. Volunteers and local groups raised funds and arranged lifts. Shared effort helped the campaign last.

D A separate legal route

5 June and 13 November 1956

Four Black women continued the case Browder v. Gayle. Parks was not a plaintiff. Federal judges ruled against bus segregation on 5 June. The US Supreme Court upheld the ruling on 13 November. Legal action mattered alongside protest.

E The boycott ended and buses changed

20 and 21 December 1956

After the court order reached Montgomery, the boycott ended on 20 December. People returned to integrated buses on 21 December 1956. The bus seating rule had changed. This did not end racism or every unfair rule.

Earlier learning: Week 2 S5; Week 3 B; Week 4 D.

F Why the campaign matters

After December 1956, in later years

The campaign showed how shared protest could last. Its networks and example helped later civil rights work. Parks's part mattered, but so did many residents, organisers and the court case. This was one influence among many, not the end of racism.

Earlier learning: Week 3 D/G; Week 4 C/D.
