

Build slides that help an audience

Today: introduce a fictional Makers Club in four clear slides.

Use the supplied facts and chart; no personal photos or online image searches are needed.

What should the audience understand after four slides?

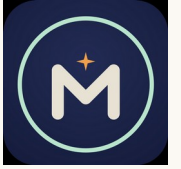

Words that help

AUDIENCE

The people who will use or view the information.

LAYOUT

The arrangement of text and visuals.

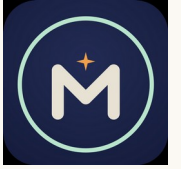

Give each slide a job

1: introduce the club. 2: show the activities.

3: explain accessible ways to join. 4: show what the fictional votes say.

Keep key text brief and readable; use one consistent style.

Why give the slides an order before decorating them?

We do: turn facts into useful points

Source: “Members can choose drawing, model making, coding or gardening.”

Slide points: “Drawing and model making” and “Coding and gardening”.

The title “Activities to try” explains what the points are for.

Has the shorter version kept all four options?

Read the fictional votes

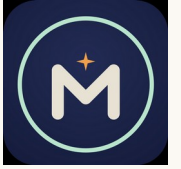

A visual must do a job

The supplied chart shows fictional club votes: Drawing 7; Model making 9; Coding 3; Gardening 5.

It can support a takeaway: “Model making received the most votes: 9.”

Label it as fictional data; the chart does not describe our class.

Why does this chart earn a place on the final slide?

Insert and resize with care

Use the image-insertion route to choose GROW_Club_Votes_Chart.png from the supplied assets folder.

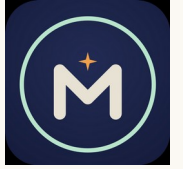

Keep the width/height proportions linked, or use the appropriate corner handle.

Check the labels remain readable and the chart does not cover text.

What might stretching only the width do?

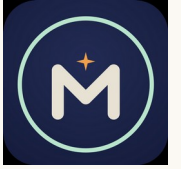

You do: complete the four-slide story

Use the source cards to replace every placeholder in GROW_W4_Mini_Deck_Starter.pptx.

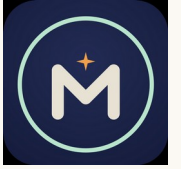

Add the chart, a fictional-data caption and one accurate takeaway.

Keep headings, body text and colours consistent enough to read.

What should not appear in the finished slides?

Check how the audience will see it

Preview the deck. Look for small text, overlaps, missing labels and the wrong order.

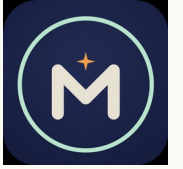

Read the chart caption and takeaway together.

If available, add concise alternative text using the same data summary.

What does a useful chart description need?

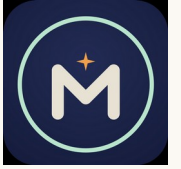

Feedback that points to a change

A: “It is bad.”

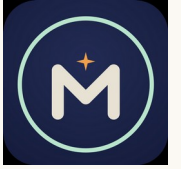

B: “The chart labels are small; could you enlarge the chart and shorten the caption?”

C: “Make every slide a different style.”

Which response gives a useful next step?

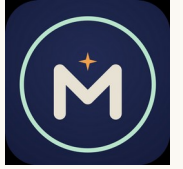

Save, reopen and improve

Save as GROW_W4_Makers_Club_v1.pptx in the approved task folder.

Reopen the copy, preview it and make one useful improvement.

Record what changed and why; save again.

Which evidence shows the improvement happened?

Your choice of review route

Show one slide privately to an adult, give a written explanation or choose a partner preview.

No public presentation or online sharing is required.
