

Belonging and having a say

Today: improve a fictional club and see how a pupil suggestion can matter.

You may use the club cards; nobody has to map their family or friendships.

What would make a new person feel welcome?

Words that help

BELONGING

Feeling accepted and included in a group.

DIVERSITY

Differences among people, experiences and ways of living.

Welcome to the Makers Club

Asha likes drawing. Ben likes building. Casey likes planning and uses written messages.

All three want to help design a small community garden.

The club currently accepts ideas only by speaking in a noisy circle.

Who could face a barrier? What could change?

Same rights, different ways to join

People can share an interest and differ in faith, culture, race, family, ability or preferences.

Nobody has to explain their identity to earn a place.

Fairness can mean different support so people can participate.

Would giving everyone only spoken instructions always be fair?

Access, preference or exclusion?

A: A quiet option is added alongside the group discussion.

B: Two members prefer different flowers for the same plot.

C: A member is kept out because of their race.

Access, preference or exclusion? — continued

Which needs an access change, which is a disagreement and which needs adult action?

Your view: Space and Voice

Space: a safe, inclusive chance to think and offer a view.

Voice: information and support to express that view in a way that works for you.

Passing is allowed. Adults should still offer an accessible opportunity.

How could the club improve Space and Voice?

Your view: Audience and Influence

Audience: someone who can help make the decision listens.

Influence: the view is considered seriously, and you hear what happened and why.

A vote or suggestion box alone does not complete the process.

The club leader reads ideas but never responds. What is missing?

We do: a fair club decision

Casey suggests a written idea board. The club leader can change the meeting format.

The leader tries the board for two meetings and invites comments about access.

The leader reports what changed and asks whether the board helped.

Disagreement needs choice; harm needs help

Ben wants red flowers. Asha wants yellow. They can choose to compare reasons and plan a mix.

If someone is threatened, bullied or excluded unfairly, an adult needs to act.

Nobody has to meet, forgive, become friends or accept unsafe behaviour.

Disagreement needs choice; harm needs help

Why should the two situations have different responses?

Your learning record

Task 1: improve access to the club.

Task 2: choose an appropriate response to disagreement or harm.

Task 3: plan how one suggestion reaches a decision and a reply.

Use the four participation words to check the plan.

Did the view make a difference?

The teacher collects ideas for a quieter starter, explains the options and reads every response.

No decision or explanation comes back.

Which part still needs attention?
