

Regulation: finding helpful support

Today: explore a support menu and make a flexible plan.

You can observe or work with a fictional character. Trying a strategy is optional.

Does helpful support have to look the same for everyone?

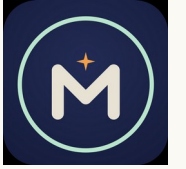

Words that help

REGULATION

Support for managing energy, feelings and attention.

STRATEGY

An action someone may try.

Your suggestion, our response

The teacher will report back on last lesson's access suggestion.

A decision should include what was considered, what can change and why.

You can say whether the response meets the access need.

Was there a listener and a clear reply?

Regulation supports the person

Someone may need help with high energy, low energy, worry, frustration or sensory overload.

Support can include another person and changes to the task or room.

The aim is support and safety; sitting still or smiling does not prove someone feels better.

What might help besides telling someone to calm down?

The noisy room

Rowan is trying to read while chairs scrape and several people talk.

An adult says, “Use your strategy,” but the noise stays the same.

Rowan asks for a quieter seat and the instruction written down.

What can the adult change?

A support menu, with choices

Notice three objects, sketch a pattern, use an agreed focus tool or sit with a supportive adult.

Choose safe movement or a quieter place within the agreed classroom plan.

If comfortable, allow gentle, unforced breathing. No breath-holding, closed eyes or touching is required.

Which options could Rowan choose without changing their breathing?

Observe, try or compare on paper

Choose one: observe the adult model, try an agreed option, or compare the fictional cards.

Afterwards choose: helpful, unchanged, unhelpful or unsure. You may keep your answer private.

You can stop, switch or ask for another kind of support.

What should happen if an option feels unhelpful?

We do: a flexible plan

When the room feels too noisy, Rowan can show the “quieter place” card.

The adult checks a suitable seat and writes the first step.

After a short check-in, Rowan can keep, change or add support.

Where is the adult’s responsibility in this plan?

A plan does not replace help

A person can ask for help at any time, even if they cannot explain why.

If worries or difficulties keep returning, tell a trusted adult and ask about further support.

If someone feels unsafe, get adult help straight away.

Should someone finish every strategy before asking for help?

Your learning record

Task 1: compare support options for Rowan and Alex.

Task 2: write a plan with a pupil choice and an adult action.

Task 3: review a trial that did not help.

How does your plan allow someone to change their mind?

What counts as a useful outcome?

Alex says, “The movement break helped me think, but I still feel worried.”

Did the support fail? What could happen next?
