Thursday 18 March 2027, P2

Listening to a Sikhism visitor reading cards

Pink supported print

Our printed visitor

Today we can learn from a printed visitor profile. It is invented for this lesson. The label is Sikhism. There is no real person's name, life story or contact detail. An adult can read the original first-person answers aloud. This is not a recording or a claim that a real visitor came. A real visitor can be used if already arranged, with permission and agreed questions. The printed version works on its own.

Sikhism

Question: What does seva mean? Answer: I understand seva as selfless service. Helping others matters in Sikh teaching. Question: How might langar show equality? Answer: At langar, people can share a free meal whatever their religion or background. Volunteers may prepare food, serve it or clean up. In this example, I would want each person to feel welcome. These are invented teaching answers about Sikhism. They are not a real person's testimony.

One viewpoint and a follow up

Question: Can one visitor tell us what every Sikh thinks?
Answer: I can offer one viewpoint. Sikh people and communities can do things in different ways. Please do not treat this example as every Sikh person's view.
Question: How could a question show careful listening?
Answer: You could use a detail from an answer. If I mentioned welcoming people, you might ask how volunteers can help a visitor who needs a different seat.
These are invented teaching answers, not a real person's testimony.

A thoughtful response

A fair listening note uses what the answer actually says. Ask about the topic, rather than private details or proof of a belief. A visitor may choose not to answer. One account is one viewpoint. It does not tell us what every Sikh thinks or does. A thank-you note can name something learned. For this printed example, write a practice note in your book. No note is sent. You can learn without sharing your own religion or experiences. Speech, pointing and a scribe are available.

Learn about these ideas without sharing your own belief. An adult can reread a short part.

Cards to discuss

A

What does seva mean in Sikhism?

B

You mentioned welcoming everyone. How could volunteers help someone who needs a different seat?

C

Tell us private details about your family and prove your belief.

D

One visitor says this, so every Sikh must do exactly the same thing.

E

The printed answer says langar is a free meal open to people of any background.

F

Thank you for explaining langar. The example helped me understand equality.