Listening and talking support

Pink supported print

My choices

I can hear one card again.

I can point, speak or use a scribe.

I can ask for an agreed quiet pause.

A talk frame

The printed Sikhism visitor said ____. Thank you for explaining ____.

A model and my turn

Worked example

Question: How could a learner respond to the answer about langar? Answer: The printed Sikhism visitor says people can share a free meal whatever their background. This links to equality because each person has equal worth. A follow-up could ask how volunteers help a visitor who needs a different seat.

My turn

Question: Respond to the answer about seva. Frame: The printed Sikhism visitor says seva means ____. One example could be ____. A related question is ____.

Plan in any language. Learn about a belief without having to share it.

Question planning card

My question

Choose one: What does seva mean in Sikhism? How can langar express equality?

My follow up

You mentioned welcoming people. How might volunteers help someone who needs a different seat?

My question check

Is it about the belief, value or practice? Does it use an answer detail?

Avoid private details or demands to prove a belief. A visitor may decline. Ask permission before a follow-up with a real visitor.

My own choice

Write in your book or tell a scribe: My question is ____. It is about ____. After hearing the answer, I could ask ____.

Listening frame

My note

The printed Sikhism visitor said ____. This links to ____ because ____. A question I could ask is ____.

One viewpoint

One account does not speak for everyone. If there is an actual visitor, use the actual answer heard and the tradition label.

My response mode

Use your book, speak, point with an explanation or ask for a scribe.

Thank you note

Practice note

Thank you for explaining ____. I learned that ____. Your example helped me understand ____.

How to use this frame

Write a practice note about the printed invented profile in your book. No note is sent. No name or contact detail is needed. You may speak or use a scribe.
