Support cards

Use the cards with a partner or adult. One reads; one finds the clue and explains. Swap roles. Each learner keeps their own answer. All examples are invented.

A

The invented paper-pack business gives a worker a payslip showing pay and deductions.

B

A worker sees paper across a walkway. They keep away from the obstruction and tell the supervisor instead of ignoring it.

C

A new worker is told to use unfamiliar equipment immediately. They have not had the training needed for the task.

D

A worker will miss the agreed start-time. They use the agreed contact procedure, explain the relevant facts and ask what to do next.

E

A supervisor refuses training to a worker because of that worker's disability, without considering what would make the training accessible.

F

A supervisor says, 'You were late yesterday, so you have no right to safety training today.'

Model and response frames

Invented example: a new worker in the paper-pack business is asked to use equipment without having been shown how. The worker says, 'I have not had the training. Please show me the safe way before I start.' No equipment is used in this lesson.

The employer must manage work risks and provide the information, instruction, training and supervision needed for the job. The worker must take reasonable care, follow the safety training received and report concerns. Both have responsibilities; one person's duty does not cancel the other's.

The request names the problem and asks for a practical next step. A worker should not guess a risky method because someone is rushing. Pause the task that seems unsafe, move away from immediate danger and tell the supervisor. Seek further help if the concern is not resolved.

A workplace may expect a worker to follow the agreed start-time and absence procedure. That is a workplace responsibility. It does not mean that lateness removes a person's legal protections. Keep a concern about behaviour separate from a person's rights.

Some rights depend on legal employment status and other conditions. This lesson uses broad worker protections, rather than deciding anyone's legal entitlement. For a real concern, get help with the specific facts from a trusted adult and an appropriate independent employment adviser.

Pair steps

1. Put the headings Right or protection, Worker responsibility and Employer responsibility on the table. Read invented cards A to F. A card can link to more than one heading; explain the link instead of forcing one answer.

2. Learner one reads A, B and C, or asks an adult to read. Learner two places each card and says, 'I chose this because ...'. The reader asks, 'Who needs to do what?'. Do not act out a hazard or an argument.

3. Swap roles for D, E and F. Each learner may pass, point, write, speak, type or use an exact scribe with readback. An adult may take the partner role. Disagree about the card, not the person.

4. Choose C or E. Rehearse one calm request for help. The partner checks three things: the problem is clear, the request is safe, and the right person is asked. Swap so each learner produces their own request. Keep one reason for each learner's choice.

Private help

Use voice, writing, pointing, a usual aid, typing or an exact scribe. Read back and correct. Plan in any language. Ask a trusted adult privately; pass, pause and return with support. No personal work or family story is needed.
