Staff answers and cover notes

Suggested responses for fictional cases. Accept other safe, reasoned responses. Do not infer a learner's personal circumstances from classroom work.

Key teaching points

• Families take different forms. Safe care and respect matter in each form.

• Adults are responsible for a child's care, safety and needs. Children are not responsible for fixing adult problems.

• Commitment can mean reliable care, keeping safe promises and explaining changes. Asking for support can help.

• A promise must never block help about safety. A trusted adult or the safeguarding lead can help; try another trusted adult if needed.

Vocabulary

Family: People linked by care or family ties. Families can have different forms.

Parenting: The work adults do to care for a child and help the child grow safely.

Responsibility: A task or duty a person is expected to carry out.

Commitment: An agreement or choice to keep giving time and care. It must not mean accepting harm.

Respect: Treating a person with care and taking their rights and boundaries seriously.

Worked model

The parent shows care by making a safe plan and giving clear information. The adult is responsible for the child getting safe care. A change does not mean that care has ended. The child does not have to solve the adult problem. A safe commitment includes keeping promises where possible and explaining a safe change.

Starter claim

Only one family form can provide good care.

Family forms differ. Care, safety and respect matter in every family. A family label alone cannot show the quality of care.

Case answers and checks

Care across two homes

Agreeing care for the appointment, arranging collection, sharing the plan and listening all show care or responsibility. Adults communicating directly can reduce uncertainty and keeps adult tasks with adults. The child is not a messenger or referee. Families can have different forms and still provide safe, steady care. The quality of care cannot be judged from the number of homes or adults alone.

A relative gives care

Food, safe care, checking needs and arranging support are adult tasks. Asking for suitable support can help the carer meet the child's needs; it does not by itself show a lack of commitment. Listening to an age-suitable choice respects the child. The adult must still make safe arrangements. A child may have small suitable tasks but must not take over the adult's caring responsibility.

A promise that needs help

No. Care or commitment never requires silence about harm, fear or safety concerns. The child can speak privately to a trusted adult or the safeguarding lead. If the first adult is unavailable or does not help, the child can try another trusted adult or ask to reach the safeguarding lead. If there is immediate danger, seek adult help straight away through the urgent procedure. The child is not at fault and does not need to investigate, confront anyone or prove a concern before asking for help.

Hinge and decision

Main key B: Commitment can include safe support. The adults remain responsible for meeting the child's needs.

Parallel key A: Care includes adapting safely, keeping the child informed and checking that needs are met.

Check privately. Proceed with a safe reason from each learner. If unsafe or unclear, re-model, use the parallel check and guide the next case. Keep normal access aids. A pass needs a later opportunity, not a negative inference.

Misconception response

Commitment means staying silent or coping alone.

Safe commitment can include asking for support, changing a plan and setting boundaries. It never requires accepting harm or keeping a safety concern secret.

Delivery boundaries and evidence

Describe families respectfully, including one-parent and two-parent families, relatives, adoptive and foster families, and parents of the same or different genders where useful. Do not ask learners to identify their own family form, contact family members or describe caring roles. Do not assume that a named family form is safe or unsafe. Parenting is adult care and responsibility; a pupil must not be made responsible for fixing an adult relationship or providing adult-level care. Commitment can include honesty, support and safe changes; it never requires tolerating harm. Do not introduce legal advice or imply that classroom work establishes legal status. Use case three as calm paper reasoning only. No acted arguments, secrecy games or role-play as a harmed child or unsafe adult. If concern arises, listen calmly, do not probe or promise secrecy, and pass it to the safeguarding lead under the school procedure. Real concerns stay in the separate safeguarding record. Privately support a learner who cannot identify a trusted adult. For optional pair work, reader A identifies a care action and reader B gives a reason, then swap; either learner may work alone or use staff support. Record only the fictional reasoning, access aids and actual content prompts. Evidence may be offered towards the unit award; staff confirm the match and make no completion claim.

Route guidance

Supported: Offer the word bank, visible model, short choices and sentence frame. Keep normal aids and record the learner's own choice.

Independent: Keep glossary and usual aids. Learner chooses the evidence, gives a reason and records a next step.

Aspire: Keep normal aids. Compare plausible choices, justify the safer response and adapt a help route. No personal detail or longer writing is required.

Evidence criteria

Care and family forms: Identifies two caring actions and does not rank families by their form.

Parenting and responsibility: Places caring duties with adults and explains how safe support can help.

Commitment and safety: Rejects secrecy about safety and gives a trusted adult or safeguarding lead route plus a fallback.

Safeguarding and response

Listen calmly to any disclosure. Do not probe, investigate or promise secrecy. Follow the school safeguarding procedure and pass concerns promptly to the safeguarding lead. Use the separate safeguarding record; keep real concerns out of learning evidence. Privately support a learner who cannot identify a trusted adult.

Use the agreed pause signal. No public reason is needed. An adult supports the agreed supervised route, a neutral task and a supported return. A learner may pass, observe or catch up privately. Keep supervision in place.
