Resilience & Change

A useful offer

Enterprise brings an idea, resources and work together.

A useful offer meets a customer’s need.

Our examples are invented and may change.

Start with what the offer helps someone do.

Product service and customer

Idea word	Invented example or meaning
Product	A labelled starter-plant pot with a care card.
Service	Help with plant labels and checks under supervision.
Customer	Someone starting a small growing container.
Useful value	Clear guidance or practical help for a need.

All examples are invented, not real business offers.

How growing becomes an offer

A plant pot can help someone begin growing.

A label-and-check service can support plant care.

Food use needs adult readiness and safety checks.

Our earlier pea trays remain observation plants.

An offer decision

The offer is help checking plant labels under supervision.

Is it mainly a product or a service?

Give a reason using item, help or action.

Use the invented offer, without a real customer.

Our idea sort

Invented offer	Need and resource to discuss
Starter-plant pot	Who needs it? ____ Resource ____
Label help	Who needs it? ____ Permission ____
Another idea	Useful offer ____ Customer type ____
Check needed	Time, resources, quality or safety ____

Use cards, a clean empty pot, labels or your book.

My first enterprise idea

My idea is ____ for ____ because ____.

Use your own words, point or tell an adult.

A first idea can change after checks.

Review and next step

Name the useful offer and intended customer type.

Identify one resource or check still needed.

Keep the first idea ready for the group chain map.

No customer contact or sale is needed today.
