

Strengths with evidence

What makes a strength claim credible?

I can identify at least four strengths and give credible evidence for two.

Use your own safe examples or the fictional case. Share only what you choose.

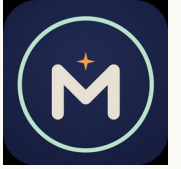

Words that help

CLAIM

A statement that needs supporting information.

CREDIBLE

Specific and believable without exaggeration.

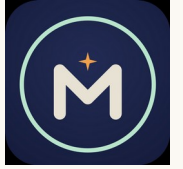

Start here

A: “I am excellent at everything.”

B: “I checked each label against the list and corrected two errors.”

Which gives more useful evidence?

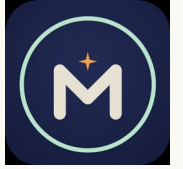

Build a credible statement

Name a strength, a context and what the person actually did.

Add a result only when it is known.

One example supports a claim; it does not prove “always” or “perfect”.

Can a strong statement include support?

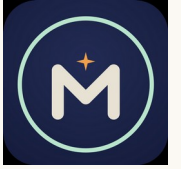

Rowan's project audit

Rowan sorted cards, checked labels and corrected two errors.

When the layout failed, Rowan used a grid and revised it.

Rowan explained the revised layout to a partner.

Which four strengths are supported?

Upgrade the claim

Weak: “Rowan is organised.”

Stronger: “During the display task Rowan grouped the cards before planning the layout.”

Known result: the revised layout fitted the board.

Write a second statement using different evidence.

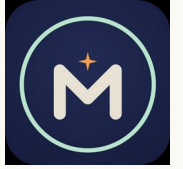

Keep it accurate

A: “This proves Rowan will always meet every deadline.”

B: “This task gives evidence of planning and checking.”

Which avoids exaggeration?

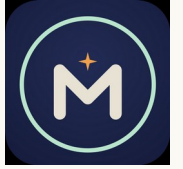

Your three tasks

1. Audit four strengths: Choose yourself or Rowan; identify an evidence context for each.
2. Write two credible statements: Include strength + context + action; add a known result where helpful.
- 3. Check the limits and next step: Identify a vague or exaggerated claim, then set one development action.

Your three tasks — continued

Use the worksheet and resource cards. Work one task at a time.

Check and improve

I can identify four strengths.

I can support two with a context and specific action.

I can distinguish an evidenced claim from an exaggeration or qualification.
