

Format a notice for its reader

Today: repair a tiny, crowded notice for a fictional Makers Club.

The message should be accurate and easy to find, not simply colourful.

What information should a reader find quickly?

Words that help

FORMATTING

Changing how text is presented.

HEADING

A short label showing what a section is about.

The reader has a job to do

The notice contains the right kind of information, but it is one crowded paragraph in tiny text.

It also says “meat” where it should say “meet”, and misspells “library”.

A spellchecker might miss a real word used in the wrong place.

The reader has a job to do — continued

Why is making the title bigger not enough?

Format with a reason

Use a meaningful heading and readable body text. Keep text dark on a light background.

Use left-aligned paragraphs for the details; bold can highlight key choices.

Avoid using colour alone to tell the reader what matters.

Format with a reason — continued

Which words might need emphasis: every word, or the activity choices?

We do: a useful heading

Replace the opening words with the heading “Makers Club pop-up”.

Place the event details in their own paragraph.

Keep the three activity choices together so a reader can compare them.

What changed for the reader?

Check the word, then the meaning

“librery” should be “library”. A spelling suggestion may help.

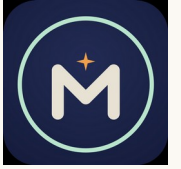

“The group will meat” should be “The group will meet”. Both words exist.

Read each sentence after making a change; do not accept every suggestion automatically.

Check the word, then the meaning — continued

Which correction needs attention to meaning?

You do: make the notice usable

Open GROW_W2_Notice_Messy.docx and save a working copy.

Add a heading, readable paragraphs and bold the three activity choices.

Correct capitals, “library” and “meat”; keep the fictional details accurate.

What should remain true after formatting?

Which change helps?

A: use six fonts and make every sentence bold.

B: use a clear heading, consistent body text and spaced paragraphs.

C: replace small body text with readable text, then proofread.

Which choices make the notice more useful?

Run the finishing check

Read the text. Check heading, fictional time/place and spelling in context.

Save as GROW_W2_Club_Notice_v1.docx in the approved task folder.

Reopen the copy and confirm the heading and last support sentence are present.

Run the finishing check — continued

What will you check if reopening shows the old tiny text?

Your practical record

Task 1: identify a reader problem and plan a change.

Task 2: edit and format the digital notice.

Task 3: explain a wording correction and verify the saved result.

What counts as evidence beyond ticking a checklist?

Meaning and layout work together

Complete: “I changed ____ so the reader can ____.”

Point to the corresponding change in your saved file.

Give one specific example.