Two stories of resilience

Pink supported edition

Story A  Nehemiah and the wall

Nehemiah heard that his people’s city walls were broken. He felt sad and prayed to God. He asked for help and made a plan.

Many people worked together. Each group built part of the wall. The task was hard. Nehemiah encouraged the workers. They kept going until they finished.

Some Jewish readers see prayer, planning and shared work as sources of strength in this story.

An original simple retelling of part of the Book of Nehemiah in the Hebrew Bible, used here as a Jewish sacred-text story. Christians also read this book. No scripture wording is reproduced.

Find and think

Who kept going?
What helped them?
What might the story teach?

Two stories of resilience continued

Pink supported edition

Story B  Ayyub asks for help

The Qur’an tells of Ayyub, who faced hardship. He asked Allah for help. The text describes him as patient. In the story, Allah answered him and brought relief.

Many Muslims see patience and trust in Ayyub’s story. He could be patient and still ask for help. Some may find hope in his example. This does not promise every hard time will end in the same way.

An original simple retelling of part of the Qur’an’s account of Ayyub, a sacred-text story in Islam. No scripture wording is reproduced.

Find and think

Who kept going?
What helped him?
What might the story teach?