Knowledge organiser (TRACK) — Present and sequence the studio portfolio

Pathway: TRACK · Week 7 Part 1 · Big question: How do we select, sequence, and annotate our studio studies to tell a clear story of artistic growth?

Core studio focus

Family: Identity and studio log

Big question: How do we select, sequence, and annotate our studio studies to tell a clear story of artistic growth?

• Sequence your Weeks 1-6 studio pages in logical order from initial media tasters to resolved identity piece.

• Mount your strongest development studies and final piece with clean margins and technical title slips.

• Write a reflective portfolio summary evaluating your strongest technique, compositional choices, and next studio target.

Essential vocabulary

• portfolio: A curated collection of studio tests, plans, studies, and finished artwork showing your progression.

• sequence: The deliberate order of pages that shows how early tests led to the final piece.

• curation: Selecting and framing your strongest evidence so each page reads clearly.

• annotation: Short reflective labels that explain the thinking behind your visual choices.

• synthesis: Bringing skills from media testing, planning, and artist study together in the final piece.

Three-step studio method

Step 1: Audit and sequence the pages: I lay out my sheets from Week 1 to Week 6 across the table in chronological studio order and number the corners.

Step 2: Mount and label key evidence: I frame my final identity piece on a dark backing card and check every study page has a clear title and medium label.

Step 3: Write the portfolio synthesis review: I complete my front portfolio review sheet, linking my Week 1/2 skill trials to my final piece and setting one target for next unit.
